Outcomes

1

Functional friction matters more to semi-urban and rural population due to higher ego depletion

Customers in this segment require higher sensitivity and empathy from insurance providers due to the heightened physical, cognitive, and time friction they face compared to Tier 1 segments

2

There is an emerging, young and aspirational segment that has Tier 1 as their benchmark

These customers seek similar levels of service and sophistication from insurance providers, necessitating tailored solutions to meet their expectations.

3

Family members, co-beneficiaries, and particularly women of the house play a significant role in decision-making within this segment

Outcomes

Relevant and timely nudges to drive customer behaviour shifts (using the EAST* framework), including but not limited to:

Encourage consistently exhibited payment behavior through automated reminders and prompts.

Connect premiums strongly to life goals, incentivizing customers with rewards and benefits aligned with their aspirations.

Reinforce the concept of delayed gratification at each premium payment moment, highlighting the long-term benefits of consistent payments.

Provide proactive extensions on due dates, demonstrating immediate flexibility and understanding of customers' needs.

Show progress towards goal achievement and acknowledge sustained persistency, prompting customers when they are most receptive to behavior change.
